

The Californians.

Those of the California emigrants who are to depart to-day on the steamer Courtland for St. Joseph, were busily engaged yesterday in getting ready for the long journey before them and in placing their freight, &c. on board the steamer. Most of those who go on the Courtland are well prepared for the journey. The greater portion of them will take their cattle from here, as well as their provisions. Some, however, will lay in their stocks of flour and meat at St. Joseph, where it can be done probably at as good advantage as here. Most of the emigrants are provided with supplies of such medical articles as will be most probably needed, both on the route and after their arrival in California.

Of the character and standing of those who are thus about to leave their homes for the far west, we can truly say they are, the greater portion of them, among our most respected citizens. They embrace in their number the various trades and professions, and their absences from our midst will be most severely felt, at least for a time.

We have taken considerable pains to obtain an accurate list of the "boys", but it is probable that with all our endeavors errors may be found in the list which we publish below. It is as nearly correct, however, as it was possible for us to get them last evening, when we closed our paper.
